

"To be truly wise is to understand that knowing and not knowing are one. Each has the power to transform"
-Richard Wagamese¹

As students we create our ideas by using "new" technology, and in modern white walled buildings. We presume and predict behaviours often isolated from the reality of those who we design for. In the future of architecture, we must encourage students to slowly return to the land, to learn from nature and from its people, it is time to return to a practise of becoming aware.

¹Richard Wagamese, One Story, One Song (Madiera Park: Douglas & McIntyre 2011), 151